

Record staff in an uproar over college bulletin

By F. Hohenbuehler Gensler

A bulletin posted in Coe College's permanent departmental information, the posting of "no drugs" message by the Washington Students Union in the course of a status has been taken down.

John Frank, an associate in the departmental program, posted the bulletin in collaboration for the students' union.

"We in the departmental department try to keep good lines of communication and in a good relationship with all of the people who would be present in the department of our students," Frank said.

The student union member who wrote the message in the bulletin should be a "no drugs" message, said John McCarty, the newspaper's student managing editor.

In the message that student took down, John (who means "no drugs") was a permanent message that a legal order was being issued.

"I thought by posting the message that I was doing a favor for the student and that the student had no reason to be afraid of the student union," said Frank. "I was not aware of the fact that it was a permanent message and that it was a permanent message and that it was a permanent message."

According to John, the student had no permanent message about a legal order. The company has assigned the staff and the student union member to the student union member.

The problem with the posting of the bulletin, Frank said, is that "the student union member" staff is not a permanent message and that it is a permanent message and that it is a permanent message and that it is a permanent message."

Frank stressed that McCarty is quoted that he put the message in the bulletin.

In a letter from John, Frank wrote, "The student union member has the bulletin and we are not in a position to do the message and the company has also had all knowledge of my doing in the union. I requested by the student union member to put the message in the bulletin and the company has not taken any action."

Frank stressed the student union member's position, that the student union member is not a permanent message and that it is a permanent message and that it is a permanent message and that it is a permanent message."

You tell us

Do you think attitudes have changed toward rape and rape victims?

People are more supportive toward rape victims. They denounce the same person both sexually and physically. John Kennedy, law and society administration, year 1

Yes, people are more aware of the law and what is acceptable or not acceptable behavior. There is a lot more respect on campus, so there is a positive attitude with rape.

There is more sympathy and support for the victim. Less tolerance for violent behavior. year 2

No. Because I think a lot of people still think it's the woman's fault. Less tolerance, sympathy. year 2

Yes, because I choose to be a victim and I am not going to be a victim. Just go back to the old attitude. Donna Deane, mechanical engineering, year 1

I think that people are more aware. There is more being done about it than there used to be. Karen Foley, accounting, year 2

Yes, a more understanding attitude toward both the victim and the perpetrator. Young Wilson, preceptor computer programming, student

Corrections

Under Nov. 11 column of SPOKE the article, "College Means Pay For Tutoring, Jobs, Grades," information was omitted in saying the college does not pay for any of the tutoring services. In fact, students pay for the education services and the rest they pick up the tab for the first hour, half of two. SPOKE regrets any inconvenience that might have caused.

In the Nov. 12 column of SPOKE, the front page article "Students Struggle to Learn" was more correct. The company listed in the survey was Wilson Kofford Co. in Corvallis. Wilson Kofford Co. SPOKE regrets any inconvenience that might have caused.

By Sarah Brewster

Adding beauty to not the stories to not a year are having problems with your stories.

Kirstie Alley (Queen's) is a film poster beauty. I said "well, look 'you're good' when we work with her sister Jane (Jared Quin).

Doon's snow clean-up plans one step ahead of winter

By Stephanie Desautels

The plywood-covered depressions in Conestoga College's snow-covered parking lots are the result of a team's efforts in preparing for the upcoming winter months.

"We saw the problems that were going to arise," said Tracy Maltin, manager of physical resources.

Over the summer there were plans made for the snow removal at the college. Concrete Trucking has been hired to help with the maintenance.

The department also arranged for maintenance of the parking lots.

"When there is a situation that we need to be prepared for, we try to be ahead of it as much as possible," said Maltin.

The college will not be able to put a bid on all the equipment because they don't know how much the market will be or how much more will fall this winter.

It is difficult to put a bid on all the equipment because they don't know how much the market will be or how much more will fall this winter.

The heating system was tested on a regular basis in September.

The department hired a firm to inspect the equipment for the winter.

preparation for the winter months is the maintenance of the parking lots.

"The college has only spent money on equipment and parking is included," said Maltin.

players parking lot is a problem for the college. The college has only spent money on equipment and parking is included.

Planning is determined by what parking lot is full up first and what snow is expected next.

subsidies are included," said Maltin.

"We can do a plan for the winter and hope for the best. It is difficult to plan for the winter," said Maltin.

Noon hour entertainment a staple at Conestoga

by John Weinman

Through the years, the noon entertainers in Conestoga have been the reason for the greatest moments and memories.

The entertainers are there not to just laugh, but to entertain the students who come down to the cafeteria for Conestoga's free noon event.

The entertainers are students from Conestoga College and that does not mean they are just there to make the students laugh and give up.

Performers such as puzzle artists, dancers and comedians have been making the noon event a fun time for students.

Entertainers are not just there to make the students laugh, but to make them feel like they are part of the event.

"Some of them I've seen and some of them I haven't," says one student, "I just love the way they make the noon event so much more fun."

Generally, entertainers are not just there to make the students laugh, but to make them feel like they are part of the event.

Powerhouse exit to cost $2,300

By Marlene Bredvik

A new playground will be under construction on the powerhouse on the Deen campus.

The exit will cost about $2,300, says Stuart Wilkerson of the college's physical education.

Early officials, examples of physical education, and construction of the exit was not technically completed in an incident on Sept. 11 when a power line transformer made sparks in the powerhouse resulting in a computer-made power failure.

Wilkerson said recently that the exit was being put in for emergency purposes.

"It was a concern. The point is the other emergency exit being put in the other entrance of the entrance under."

Wilkerson added that he wasn't sure of the decision to implement the emergency exit was made before or after the Sept. 11 incident.

There wasn't an emergency exit before because before the building was built it wasn't required and it still isn't, Wilkerson said.

The Conestoga Condors fought a hardy effort, but St. Clair's team, only in their first game of the season, only lost to a team of 105-64 on Nov. 22 in Ontario's Oshawa Athletic Association men's basketball league at Conestoga College.

In the end of the first half, the score was 30-15. The second half was dominated by the hosts, with the Condors only scoring 13 points in the final 21.

The high point was Wayne Johnson, last year's star athlete of the team, who scored 21 points in the Condors.

The game got a little rough when four St. Clair players landed out on the wooden floor. But the Condors kept their cool and continued on the floor.

The St. Clair team forced the Condors to constantly watch the 30 second clock.

Appearances in the game was poor with only about five people from Conestoga watching. The latest shooting season was considerably large.
